On June 1st IMPACT pharmacist Natalie Jonasson joined the team of family physicians, nurses, residents, nurse practitioner and social worker at the Bruyère Family Health Network (FHN).

The Bruyère FHN, a bilingual teaching centre for the University of Ottawa, receives more than 28,000 patient visits per year. Along with graduate and undergraduate medical education, the staff provides expertise in the fields of evidence-based medicine, women and adolescent health, medical informatics and immigrant and refugee health. The centre also features its own art gallery dedicated to exhibits that explore the themes of culture, art and healing.

The inner city location and the University affiliation provide the Family Medicine Centre with a diverse group of patients, including diplomats, writers and visual artists, university professors, and refugees and retirees.

PEPPER, an EMR developed by IMPACT co-investigators Gary Hollingworth and Robert Bernstein, will be used to explore the role of medical informatics in the integration of a pharmacist into group family practice.
